SITUATION SUMMARY

Weather of Concern

Northern California

- A low end atmospheric river event is forecast to bring significant rainfall amounts to Northern California beginning Thursday evening.
 - Heaviest rainfall is expected across Del Norte, Humboldt, Mendocino and Trinity counties.
 - Urban and small stream flooding is likely.
 - Significant rises on main stem rivers can be expected.

Southern California

- High surf conditions are expected for the Central Coast beginning this morning and persisting through Thursday night.
 - High surf is expected to reach the inner waters and beaches of Los Angeles to the Santa Barbara south coast on Wednesday causing beach erosions and minor flooding which can suddenly overrun previously dry beaches.

River Forecasts

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

Upper level ridging will prolong mostly dry weather through Wednesday before a low end atmospheric river brings widespread rain Thursday afternoon and Friday. The weather pattern will remain unsettled through the weekend.

Medford Weather:

Another quiet day can be expected underneath a high pressure area. The cold front offshore will move into the coastal waters tonight and will bring gusty south winds to the coast and the coastal mountains. This front has tapped into subtropical moisture and the atmospheric river will bring plenty of rain to extreme Northern California starting Thursday morning.

Reno Weather:

Warm and dry conditions predicted with high pressure today and Thursday. The next system will arrive early Friday and this weekend. Rain, high elevation snow and gusty winds on Friday with snow levels lowering and significant snow likely in the higher elevations of the Sierra for the weekend.

San Francisco Weather:

High pressure aloft will maintain dry weather conditions and mild temperatures through Thursday. Rain chances return from the north during the day Thursday and will spread slowly southward through Friday. Lingering showers will be possible on Saturday with an increased chance of precipitation Saturday night into Sunday.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY:

Sacramento Weather:

Dry weather predicted with morning valley fog through mid-week. Wet storm system will affect Northern California from late Thursday into the weekend.

Hanford Weather:

High pressure will bring dry conditions to Central California through Thursday. However, periods of nighttime and morning fog will be possible across the San Joaquin Valley. Above normal temperatures will prevail. A storm system will move into Central California by the weekend bringing a return to unsettled conditions.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles weather:

Weak to moderate offshore flow and above normal temperatures will continue through Friday. Increased onshore flow and partly to mostly cloudy skies will bring cooler temperatures to the area Saturday. A low pressure system will give the area a good chance of rain and mountain snow Saturday night into Monday followed by dry and cool weather for next Tuesday.

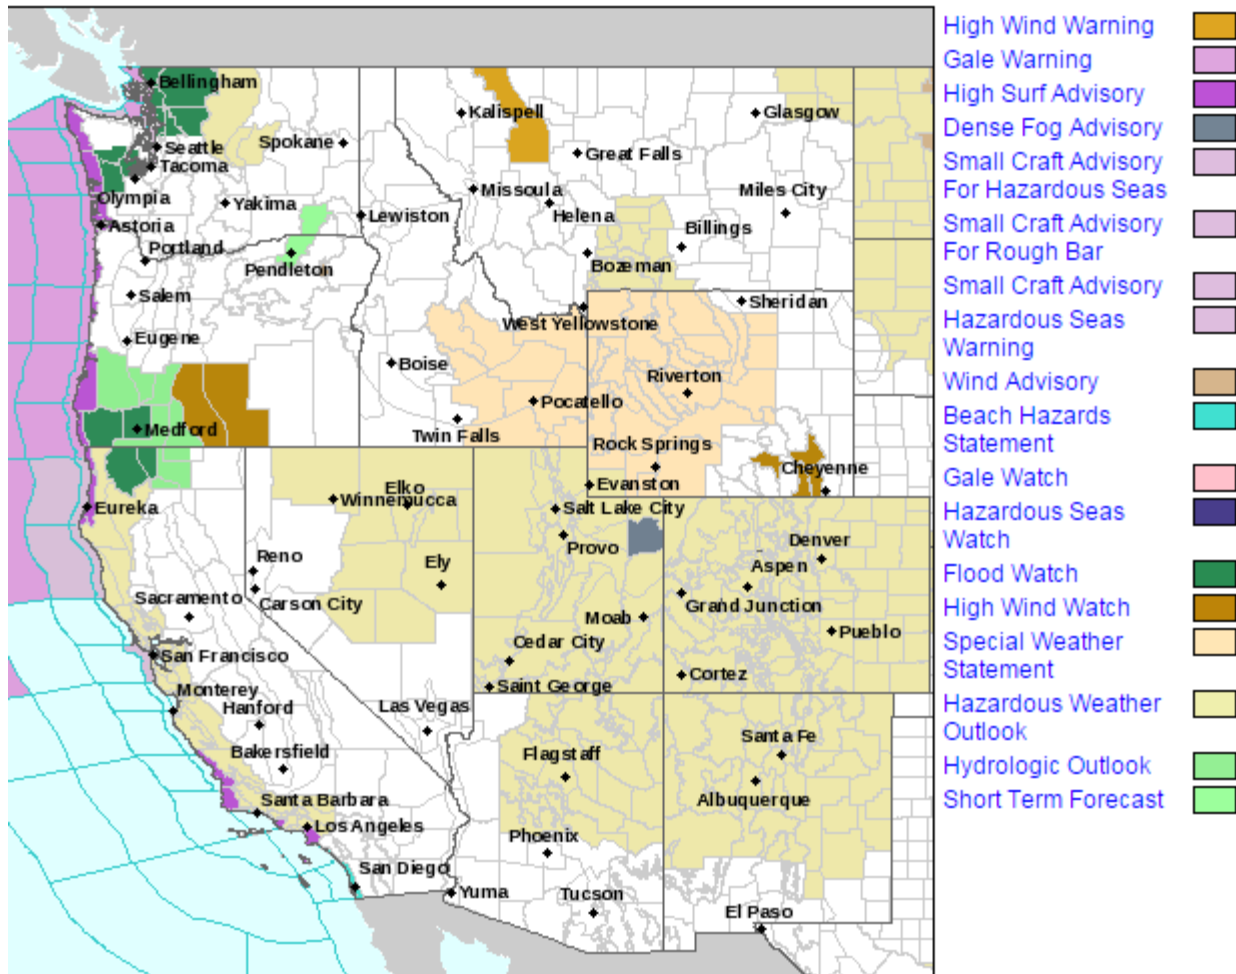

Extreme Southwestern California including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

High pressure aloft and offshore flow will bring warm dry weather this week. By next Sunday, it will be much cooler with rain likely and possible strong winds when a storm system moves across California.

Southeast California Weather:

High pressure will result in dry and mild conditions through Friday with breezy north winds lingering in the Colorado River Valley. A series of Pacific storms will bring unsettled weather conditions to the southern Sierra late Friday. Much cooler temperatures return early next week.
